

Traditional Sandstone Climbing Week –Adršpach 2012

We would like to invite you for the first International Traditional Sandstone Climbing Week in the Czech Republic. The trad sandstone climbing is a very specific kind of rock climbing and in the area of Adršpach you can find more than 3000 routes leading to the tops of amazing sandstone spires. The highest tower in the area is called „Milenci – the Lovers“ and you can climb faces nearly 100 metres high there. In case of bad weather we may travel by cars to other sandstone areas either in Český Ráj (the Czech Paradise) or in the Elbe valley which allow climbing even when there are adverse conditions in Adršpach.

Specific climbing ethics have been applied on the Czech sandstone due to its long and inspiring tradition as well as because of some softer rock formations that require a special approach. These rules include a ban of chalk and elimination of „hardware“ (as friends or nuts) for protection whatsoever. This means we use different kinds of slings with knots, threads and such like, for protection between fixed ring bolts which are sometimes rather apart. Nowadays though, there is also a number of well protected modern climbs next to the traditional ones.

Sandstone climbing definitely features an exciting experience very different from other climbing styles and areas elsewhere.

OVERVIEW

The Czech Mountaineering Federation's (CMF) International Traditional Sandstone Climbing Week will be held in Adršpach, the area best known for its daring cracks and friction routes among others. As an international guest you will be accompanied by Czech host climbers who will take you out during the days and show you the full delights of sandstone trad climbing with all specifics including knots as the means of protection etc. There will be interesting presentations in the evenings given by some Czech best climbers.

EXPERIENCE

To take part in this event climbers must be experienced in rock climbing. The experience with trad climbing is recommended but not necessary, the level of climbing skills should start from 6a (in French grade) upwards.
